

Being Too Close

- Being too close is when I get very near another person.
- Most people like to have a bit of space around them. This is often called 'Personal Space'. It is usually about an arm's length when I am facing someone.
- Most people feel uncomfortable when other people get too close. I can try not to get too close when I am talking to people.
- Sometimes I have no choice but to get very close to people. For example, in a crowd or a tight space. When I have to stand very close to someone I can turn my body so that I am not looking into their face.
- Being too close is invading someone's personal space. This is not OK. If I have to be very near someone I can look away.
